This course is aimed at experienced clinicians (counsellors, psychotherapists and counselling psychologists) of all therapeutic modalities.

This training day is designed to take seriously the reality of suicide and to enable practitioners to be skilled and supported in order that they can assess indications of suicide, identify their own limits, and if appropriate, work therapeutically with suicidal patients.

The aims of the day are to:

- * Identify suicidal ideation and suicidal features in initial assessment.
- * Understand the conditions for psychotherapeutic work – is such work possible with this patient?
 - * Increase awareness of referral options – where, how, to whom?
 - * Explore models of shared care and medical and therapeutic co-working.
 - * Explore work with suicidal patients – knowing, understanding, holding and containing.
- * Understanding of the nature of suicide – destructive attachment or absolute non-attachment.
- * Understanding the fantasy, reality and purpose of this person's suicidal idea and intention.
 - * Further understanding of the suicidal condition – anger, rage, despair etc.
 - * Explore legal and ethical considerations.
 - * Explore the consequences of a suicide.

The James Wentworth-Stanley Memorial Fund was set up to help raise awareness of anxiety, depression and suicide amongst young people and to tackle the terrible and shocking statistic that suicide is the largest cause of death amongst young men in the UK.
